BUSINESS IN THE SUPREME COURT.

A MOTION TO ADVANCE THE CASE OF THE STRIKING ENGINEER LENNON.

Washington, April 25.-In the United State Supreme Court to-day, Walter H. Smith, of this city, and Judge Barber, of Cleveland, appeared as attorneys for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. and made a motion to advance the case of James Lennon, appellant, from the Circuit Court at Toledo, Ohlo. Lennon is one of the Lake Shore Railroad engineers who was adjudged guilty of contempt in refusing to obey the orders of the Court in regard to the handling of Toledo, Ann Arbor and North Michigan cars. He was sent to jail for contempt. An application was made to the Circuit Court at Toledo for his release on a writ of habeas corpus, which was denied. An appeal was then taken to the United States Supreme Court.

It is not probable that the motion made to advance the case will be declined at this term of the court, as arguments will not be heard after next Friday. The matter will then go over to the October term without action.

The Court adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The day call will be Nos. 215 and 216, 259, 261, 190, 263 and 278, 269, 270, 276, 279 and 250.

ONLY HULSE AND MAHER BLAMED.

RESULT OF SUPERINTENDENT LATHROP'S IN-QUIRY INTO THE SING SING ESCAPES.

Sing Sing, N. Y., April 25 .- The Superintendent of risons, Austin Lathrep, who has arrived here to-day, has concluded his investigation of the manner of the escape of the two nearderers, Rochl and Pallister, and has come to the conclusion that the guard, Hulse, and the yardman, John Maher, are entirely to blame. He exonerates Warden Brown and all the other prison officals from blame.

Superintendent Lathrop thinks that Roehl and Pallister are with friends in New-York, and that it will be useless for the prison guards to continue the search through this part of the country unless some definite trace of them is discovered.

The reported escape of prisoners from Deputysheriff Pugsley while on the way to Sing Sing prison is incorrect. Pugsley was in search of Roehl and Pallister between Mt. Kisco and Brewsters last night. and was returning from Peekskill with a jocose friend; hence the story. He had no prisoner, and under no circumstances would be be conveying prisoners from Peekskill to Sing Sing prison. They are brought here from White Plains, the county seat.

VIENNA'S "CONTESSEL."

THE FASCINATING AUSTRIANS.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S OFSERVATIONS ON THE BEAUTIFUL VIENNES - HOW SHE SINGS, PLAYS, AND WALTZES-THE YOUNG

COUNTESS RULES. of all the women on the face of the globe it is the Viennese who to my mind is the most truly and unaffectedly feminine, and therefore attractive. In her nature appears to have full sway, both as regards characters. per nature appears to have full stay, gards character and physique, untrammelled by conventionality, pretence or artificiality, and white she betrays no pride or conceit concerning her manifold and numerous charms, she does not in any way attempt to conceal those characteristically feminine shortcomings-correctly described as redeeming faults -which contribute so much to render her captivating in our eyes, and without which she would be al together too perfect, so perfect, indeed, that while we might be tempted to venerate her as a saint, we should no longer be able to love her as a woman The one great obecit in the life of a Viennese, be she either "Contessel" or factory girl, is to get as much pleasure out of life as possible. She looks at the rosy side of everything disagreeable, regards with indulgence all indiscretions and errors; and if her warm and generous heart occasionally moves her to grief, it is as brief as it is violent, and before the cars have had three to dry upon her rosy cheeks, her face is once more wreathed in smiles. Indeed nowhere in the world does one see so many smiling faces as in Vienna. With the solitary exception of the Emperor, whose kindly face is always inexpressibly sad, everybody in the Kaiserstadt seems to be beliaming over with g od and merry humor. No one appears ever to be in a bad temper, or, for the matter of that, in a harry. Life is too short for either, and carriages in some crowded thoroughfare, the drivers, instead of imparting an odor of brimstone to the atmosphere by the lurid violence of their blasphemy, on the contrary crack jokes and while away the time

The Orient and the Occident are most charmingly mingled in the Viennese woman, who may be de-scribed as a mixture of both. While she has all the sterling moral qualities, the common sense and high standard of intelligence of the West, her physical charms partake more of those of the East. figure is more full than that of the Parisienne, or of the latter's counterpart, the New-York girl, and is built on lines that may be described as voluptuous. Although frequently the blondest of the blondes, her form is that of one of the houris of the Orient, where small, artificially compressed waists are unknown and where nature is permitted to have free sway with the figure. It is to the Orient, too, that the Viennese is probably indebted for her love of bright colors, which, though vivid, are invariably harmonious, picturesque and becoming when worn by her. Still another Oriental characteristic which we find very strongly de veloped in the Viennese girl is her passionate love dance at Vienna as nowhere else in the world, save perhaps among the Gitanas at seville or the Tsiganes at Moscow; and, indeed, so thoroughly does the musical and rhythmical instinct seem laborn in them that one would almost be tempted to believe that, notwithstanding their blond hair and fair complexion. they have in their veins a strain of Gypsy blood. In West music as a rule comes to us by education and with rare exceptions we are entirely wanting it what may be described as the sacred fire of harmony The Viennese, however, seem to possess the gift as a birthright, and they need no instruction to produce the most entrancing melody. Let any one who doubts this get some French, German, English or American virtueso to play a waltz of Strauss on the piane. While the execution may be perfect, yet it will leave the listeners cold and unmoved. But let an ordinary Viennese player, a man of the humblest classes—let us say a journeyman tailor, a back-driver or a waiterplay identically the same piece on either planeforte or on the zither: the blood will begin to course more quickly through our veins, there will come a sort of delightful yet inexpressible little cold shiver down the small of the back, and unconsciously we find our selves keeping time both with voice and feet.

This being the case, dancing of course plays a great role in the life of the Viennese. It did so in 1815, when the Prince de Ligne wrote; "The Congress dances, but does not make any progress with Everybody dances at Vienna, young and old, rich and poor, the higher-born and those of the humbler birth; and so passionately fond are the people of this form of entertainment that one almost feels convinced that they picture to themselves heaven in the shape of some grand carnival time ball, where lovely engels will perpetually float around through the air with archangels as partners to the strains of strains's waltzes, played by celestial performers. But to no one, perhaps, does dancing constitute so If she belongs to the aristocracy, no she is princess, baroness, or merely entitled to the notitiary particle of "Von," she is designated until that are accorded to her by tradition. Thus at nearly all the balls that are given by the great world there to them and their partners. There they dance and firt unhampered by the presence of any chaperon; bride, who ventures to cross the threshold and to invade their domain would be regarded as an intruder and guilty of a breach of good form and ettquette. At the supper which follows a certain number of tables are set aside for the exclusive use of the — ontessel" and of their partners, and woe betide the married woman who tries to obtain room. Unlike Paris, London and New-York, where it is the young married woman who is the queen of the ball, at Vienna is the young girl the "Contessel" who reigns supreme there, and who carries everything before her. freedom of chaperonage would not be possible, were it not for the fact that the great world at Vienna a sort of big family, and very close corporation, where nearly all are related to one another, and fro which strangers and foreigners, except when related to noble houses in Austria, are pittlessly excluded Carrie Granville, who danced and sang herself Blue blood, untarn shed by any plebelan strain, through six or seven generations of ancestry, are indispensable to those who would belong thereto; and no new rank, no matter how great, conferred by the Sovereign can win for the bearer admission to the charmed who might be inclined to take undue advantage of the familiarity and unconventionality that prevail. Every one calls every one else by the Christian names, and addresses each other as "Thon." Married women and young girls have no companction ried women and young gris have no compunction about honoring the men present, all more or less closely related to them, with honest, hearty handshakes, that would cause the half of a dame of the haute bourgeoist of London or Paris to rise in horror from her head were she to witness it; and above all there is no pretence and no affectation. All are so intimately acquainted with one another's affairs, antecedents, family and fortunes that pretence would be superfluous; and it is impossible to describe the charm this freedom from all arthicality, snobbery and holiow affectation imparts to Viennese society.

PRINCESS SUSANNA MATILDA CAROLINA.

Walter Besant in The London Queen.

The history of Her late lamented Royal Highness the Princess Susanna Matilda Carolina, sister of Her Majesty Queen Charlotte, may, perhaps, be told again after 120 years. This remarkable marrative, which is now probably forgotten, belongs to the period immediately preceding the American War of Independence. The Princess appeared suddenly before an astonished world, like Caspar Hauser and that other Princess, the Lady Caribboo. How she accounted for her appearance; what story she proffered that would possibly account for a German Princess dwelling all alone in a country so far from her fatherland is not explained, for the place in which she appeared was the colony of North Carolina, she said, however, that she was H. R. H. the Princess Susanna Matilda Carolina, sister of Queen Charlotte; she had with her valuable jewels, and portrait of Her Majesty; her handkerchiefs were embroidered with a crown and a B. She travelled from one plantation to another, everywhere being received with the most profound respect. All the planters and all the planters' laddes, who were, of course, intimately familiar with the ways of Royalty, declared that the illustrious traveller had the manners and the bearing of a Princess. As she borrowed money wherever she could, she probably had servants and a carriage. She gratiously admitted people to the honor of bissing her hand; she condescended to converse upon the subject of her royal sister; she promised her friends all kinds of things, especially commissions in the army and navy, church dignities, offices, sliceures and promotions. Then-alas for the instability of human greatnessi-the following and cry.

convict. Sarah Wilson had been lady's-maid to the Hon, Miss Vernon, Maid of Honor to the Queen. She got into the Queen's apartments, stole some jewels, and was apprehended, tried, and sentenced to death. The Queen, however, merchally procured a mitigation of the sentence to transportation. With these results. History is silent as to the fate of the Princess Susanna Matilda Carolina. Probably she was handsomely whipped, after the fashion of the times, and sent back to work in the shelds. But she had a brilliant though brief period of greatness and splendor which without doubt lit up the rest of her years and consoled her in her slavery. One would have liked a little conversation with the Princess when arrived at old age. I am quite certain that there were some who believed in her to the end. "Her manners, my dear, her dress; her face: the way she held out her hand. Princessly. Quite Princessly. These things cannot be put on."

SPRING FASHIONS.

A DEMI-TOILETTE-BRIDESMAID'S DRESS. Here is a beguiling little demi-tollette gown from Paris-a tasteful arrangement of white silk crepon popular lace insertions. A flounce or deep ruffle edges the shirt. The collar and folded sash are of white ribbon.

A pretty bride-maid's gown recently worn is of deep ivery bengaine, edged with a frill of lace through which brown satin baby-ribbon is run. The brownish cream shade of the tich silk and the dark tan tone of the ribbon are very attractive in combination. The seams on the bodice and skirt are sewn over an insertion of pleats which give a flare. The cloth is of a soft petunia shade and the trimming is of velvet of a darker shade edged with a thick galon cord in shaded petunia and gold. The bedice is draped in front. The sleeves, bretelles, and collar are of velvet.

The importance which the sleeve has attained in dress may be demonstrated by the fact that a clever English cutter has recently sold the "copyright" to a chart for "sleeve cutting" for no less sum than $50,000. The dressmalker who purchased the chart has already been compelled to defend the system in court and indement was awarded her. By this court, and judgment was awarded her. system all that is necessary is the measurement of the arm. The fit of the sleeve has become one of the most important matters in modern dress. It requires a true conturiere to fit a sleeve with the "cale" effect that is demanded to-day by the fas-ticlous woman of fashion. It is the style of the sleeve that marks the smart gown more than any-thing else.

The new Liberty scarfs are simply wide scarfs of silk muslin in pale rose, delicate blue, or violet or any dainty color. Slender maldens drape these, bouffant bow in front. This scarf usually measures eighteen inches in width by two yards in length, and costs $2.45. These scarfs do not take their name, as might be supposed, from the patron goddess of the "land of the free," but from the famous London shop which introduced them.

From where its head-waters gather, in Lake Tear of the Clouds, under the sheltering heights of Mount Marcy, to where the mighty stream encircles Manhattan Island in its arms, Mr. Stoddard followed the course of the Hudson. He described the lakes of the northern wilderson. He described the lakes of the northern whate-ness; the chasms of Ausable, and the rocky fastnesses of the heart of the Adirondacks. Photographs taken by daylight, flashlight and the light of other days were thrown upon the screen to lend additional force to the word pictures of the lecturer.

Pittsburg, April 23.—Dr. C. G. Hussey, possibly the wealthlest citizen of Western Pennsylvania, died at 9 o'clock this morning. Mr. Hussey is said to have been the pioneer in the copper business of the United States, having large interests in the Lake Superior regions. He was the principal stockholder in the "Caroni-le-Telegraph" Publishing Company. Mr. Hussey was over ninety years of age. Last Saturday afternoon, while at his home in Shady Side, he slipped and fell to the floor, injuring his hip seriously. The physicians say that death was probably due to the injuries received at that time.

Four years ago the plant was moved to Kansas and "Father" Tobey, as he was known, withdrew from

HUNTING FOR THREE MISSING PERSONS.

F. SCHLESINGER, A DRYGOODS IMPORTER, NOT SEEN SINCE APRIL 19.

The police have been searching a week for Frank schlesinger, formerly a drygoods importer, at No. 45 Greene-st., who disappeared mysteriously on April 14. Mr. Schlesinger lately had lived at the Gerlach, in West Twenty-seventh-st., with his wife and two children. For several months he had been too ill to attend to any business. It was said that he had worked too hard last summer, and had suffered from a severe attack of influenza in the fall. By the advice of his physician he took a trip to the West Indies. Later he went to Watkins, and when he returned to the city he thought he would be able to resume his business. He found that he could not apply himself to his former duties, however, and he be-one extremely melancholy.

On the afternoon of April 14 he went to No. 45 Greene st., to see his former partner in business, who was about to sall for Europe. He left the building about 4 p. m., and disappeared. His wife, who formerly was a Miss Barbour, caused inquiries to be made, and consulted his counsel, F. G. Dow, of No. with gold and crystal leads, the revers and cuds being edged with the same.

Mr Dow said last evening that Mr. Schlesinger was a well educated man of temperate habits and quiet tastes. He contradicted a report that Mr. schlesinger had exhibited symptoms of insanity previons to his disappearance.

The police have been directed to search also for FIVE EAST NINETEENTH STREET, Albert Bloch, a retired grocer of middle age, who lived at No. 19 Barrow st. and disappeared on April 17. His wife said yesterday that no cause for his disappearance was known. He had not been in good health. On the day of his disappearance he left the house, saying that he was going to take a walk and he failed to return.

An alarm was sent from the Central Office last night, directing a police search for Mrs. Emma D. Holmes, of River Falls, Wis., who disappeared mysteriously in this city on March 22. Her brother, Henry Miller, who is a banker of Eiver Falls, has offered a reward of 8300 for information leading to her discovery. Mrs. Holnes came to this city several months ago to visit friends. She was at the house of a Mrs. Reynolds in East Forty eighth-st, in March and intended to visit the family of George Delivan in Ercoklyn. On the day of her disappearance she started to go to Brooklyn. It was nearly two weeks before her friends in this city knew that she had falled to reach her intended destination, and her Leroslyn, friends thought she was still in this city. Mrs. Holmes was described as fifty years old, of medium height pan stout, with right complexion and light brown hair. She was well aressed and carried a satchel. months ago to visit friends.
